For students entering the degree program during the 2022-2023 curricular year.

Through coursework and first-hand research experience, anthropology majors will gain knowledge and research skills that employers value and that will help the students to make sense of the sociocultural worlds that we all live in. The hands-on research component of this major also makes it an excellent choice for students interested in going on to further graduate study in any social science discipline.

THE DISCIPLINE
Sociocultural anthropologists seek to understand human behavior in its cultural contexts. Particularly unique to our program is that students conduct their own original research in an international field school under the close mentorship of a faculty member.

FINANCING
Many students work up to 20 hours per week. Some find employment in campus labs and many of our junior and senior students obtain teaching or research assistantships. Most of our students obtain summer jobs that make use of their training and interests. There is frequently additional funding available to help support students pay for their international field schools. Additionally, there is a local field school option for students who, for whatever reason, are unable to participate in one of our international field schools.

CAREERS
Students majoring in sociocultural anthropology will acquire a set of skills that employers find very appealing, including: ability to plan, design, and carry out research; writing skills; cross-cultural understanding; and ability to work effectively in groups. For more information on careers in your major, please contact the University Career Center or the College of Family, Home, and Social Sciences Academic Advisement Center.

MAP DISCLAIMER
While every reasonable effort is made to ensure accuracy, there are some student populations that could have exceptions to listed requirements. Please refer to the university catalog and your college advisement center/department for complete guidelines.
